City leaders seek fees, permits for street performers

Keytar Bear is not pleased.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

In an effort to clamp down on Boston's free-for-all street performance rules, two city leaders were considering a new permitting policy for artists who use sidewalks and parks as stages.

All the city's guitar-strumming, bowling pin juggling, breakdancing public entertainers would need to buy $40-per-year permits to practice their craft, according to an idea scheduled to be pitched at a City Council meeting on Wednesday.

Keytar Bear, for one, was not pleased to hear the news.

"This is an effort to take away the soul of Boston, and to kill Boston culture slowly," the beloved bear costume-wearing performer told Metro. "Buskers generally are seen as a threat anyway and always have been. We don't conform to the norms of society. ... Whoever's at the very top of the pyramid doesn't like that."

Councilors Salvatore LaMattina and Bill Linehan were behind the idea. LaMattina told Metro the proposal — modeled after permitting policy in Cambridge — came after hearing complaints about dancers near Faneuil Hall, whom he described as loud and intimidating.

"This particular group is very insulting to people," he said. "It's nothing against street performers."

He said he couldn't identify exactly which group had been performing in the space and said he hadn't attempted to reach out to them. The dancers were not there on Tuesday.

The ordinance as proposed would allow Public Works to revoke permits through a hearing process. It would restrict performers from setting up within 50 feet of one another or within 100 feet of a hospital or a school, library or church in session.

The MBTA requires musicians to have permits to perform in T stations. They cost $25. Artists have to apply for permits to perform at Faneuil Hall, which are issued by the marketplace's owners.

Otherwise, street performers have been allowed to set up on sidewalks, parks and other public places in the city without permits since the mid-2000s.

Stephen Baird, executive director of Boston-based nonprofit Community Arts Advocates, told Metro he supported the councilors' idea because it could make street performance in Boston more orderly.

"This is an effort to take away the soul of Boston, and to kill Boston culture slowly."

Keytar Bear

"Some people are so loud and so crazy they get everybody mad. When that happens they crack down on everybody," he said. "I do like a permit system because it's something you can show a police officer."

One free speech expert, meanwhile, said he strongly opposed the idea.

"This is just the latest in a long series of efforts by governments to try to capitalize and profit from actions and activities that are quintessential examples of free speech," Harvey Silverglate, a Boston-area First Amendment lawyer, told Metro.

Wizard casts spell of calm at Boston's rock 'n' roll shows

Odds are, if you've gone to concerts and festivals in Boston, you've seen the Wizard standing guard.

NATE HOMAN
@MetroBOS
nate.homan@metro.us

By the time the fan decided to make a run at Debbie Harry, the Wizard was on him before house security saw him on their crystal ball.

"She was on her first solo tour, and she came down the back stairs, across an empty dance floor before the show," said private security guru Jeff Freedman, owner of Boston's famed Wizard Security. "This kid jumped over the railing and tried to grab her. So I took him out."

From that moment on, Freedman set out to work as a conductor of crowd control in Boston's nightclubs and concert halls. His love of hard rock combined with an unflinching drive to protect the party kicked off the ongoing voyage of Wizard Security, a highly recognizable, rigorous defender of music lovers.

If you've found yourself in a Boston-area mosh pit in the last few decades, chances are you've run into the 5-foot-5 Methuen-born biker, pilot, vendor and small-business owner. Despite his small stature, he's hard to miss.

"Tossing people off stage back into the crowd is the fun part," Freedman said. "That never gets old. If it's a punk or metal or hardcore show, that's the part that stage divers live for. I know the difference between someone coming over the barricade to have fun versus someone looking for trouble. It's very rare I have to get physical with people."

It was 1984, and a week after he decked the dude who ran at the Blondie frontwoman, the owner of The Channel needed someone to work a New Kids On The Block show. After working The Channel for five years, Freedman was hired to work every club on Lansdowne Street. He's built his reputation by working seven days a week at a breakneck pace for more than 30 years.

"Good security means nothing happens."
Freedman

"He's a guy who has been there forever," Dave Tree, 47, lead singer of Boston's punk stalwarts Tree said. "The bouncers at The Channel had no idea what to do if kids were crowd-surfing. He's incredibly calm in chaos. The bands love him because he runs it like we are on the same team. Everybody who is involved in that world has seen him in action."

Today, he is 70, has business degrees from Boston University, Tufts and UMass Boston, and is still running the safety at hundreds of shows a year.

His watchful eye keeps bands and patrons safe from creeps, rowdy drunks and other troublemakers while keeping the well-behaved audience members hydrated, tossing water bottles to those who seem ready to wilt.

"We love having him," said Clay Ferland, Middle East Club general manager since 2002. "I've worked with him at multiple venues, and I know that he is constantly busy from clubs to city events. He knows everyone playing that night. They look out for him and he looks out for them at the same time."

He had the name Wizard Security before the long, gray ponytail and the distinctively large rings for each knuckle and grew into the image of a hardcore Gandalf who befriends as many acts as possible.

"I was working the downstairs bar," Ferland said. "He wasn't even working that night, but Lars Frederiksen and The Bastards were playing. In comes the Wizard with his buddy, who was the scariest dude I'd ever seen. He was giant, tattooed all over, towering over the Wizard. Turned out that was Lars. They're old friends, so he was a volunteer bodyguard and a fan in one."

One night circa 1990, Freedman said, Pantera was playing The Channel and the adrenaline in the room hit the stratosphere. A bald-headed crowd surfer went headhunting, looking to clobber all in his range.

The Wizard worked his magic to defuse the situation through the power of laughter instead of meeting the aggression head on.

"He was looking to brawl, and I saw him from my position on the stage between the monitors," Freedman said. "He looked like a bulldog. He didn't have any hair for me to grab onto, so I grabbed him by the ears and gave him a big wet kiss. The crowd laughed, the band laughed and the hostility went away right there."

Freedman rarely speaks about his endeavors as the Wizard Security guy to the media. He said that more often than not, interviewers want to hear about the blood and gore of the gig.

"Good security means nothing happens," Freedman said. "If you're fighting fires all night, you haven't done your homework. The majority of the problems can be avoided or addressed with a quick word, telling folks to cut it out."

He has safeguarded punks like Rancid and GBH, hardcore bands like Converge and the Cro-Mags, boy bands like 98 Degrees and LFO, rappers like Ghostface Killah and Slaine, hemp-worshiping hippies at Freedom festivals and legends like Tom Jones and Johnny Cash in tiny sweatbox clubs and open air festivals alike.

Somehow, he still has decent hearing, all of his teeth and no plans of retiring.

"The real show is never on stage," The Wizard said. "It's in the crowd."

Judge OKs second 'Baby Doe' autopsy

A judge in Dorchester Municipal Court approved the defense's request for a second autopsy for Bella Bond, the 2-year-old formerly known to the world as Baby Doe, after she was found dead in a trash bag on Deer Island this past June.

Rachelle Bond and her boyfriend, Michael McCarthy (shown), were charged in the infant's death last month. Bond's attorney requested the second autopsy in order to prove her client beat her child to death.

McCarthy's attorney also requested the autopsy because the murder charges McCarthy faces are solely from Bond's confession to police.

The prosecution did not object to the request for the second autopsy.

Bond is still being held on $1 million bail and McCarthy isn't going anywhere after he was ordered held without bail. There will be a probable cause hearing on Nov. 19.

Philippines to deport US Marine facing murder trial after his sentence

Pemberton faces jail term of 20 years to life if found guilty. A verdict is expected in December.

The Philippine Immigration Bureau has ordered the deportation a U.S. Marine once his trial and possible sentence for the murder of a transgender woman a year ago are over, a spokeswoman said Tuesday.

Lance Cpl. Joseph Scott Pemberton, who is being held at a U.S. facility at a military base in Manila, has been charged with the murder of Jennifer Laude, who was found dead Oct. 11, 2014, in a hotel in Olongapo City, near a former U.S. naval base north of Manila.

Elaine Tan, spokeswoman for the immigration bureau, said Pemberton was declared "a risk to public interest for being an undesirable alien" and would be deported once his murder trial and any subsequent jail term were over.

Pemberton would be deported even if the court found him not guilty, she said. REUTERS

U.S. ends probe of Wal-Mart on "Made in USA" logos

The Federal Trade Commission, which enforces laws against deceptive ads, said Tuesday it had closed a probe of Wal-Mart Stores Inc. after the company addressed the problem of products advertised as "Made in USA" that were not.

The FTC closed the probe without action after Wal-Mart dropped all "Made in USA" logos from products on its website, the FTC said in a letter to the company that was posted on the agency's website.

Wal-Mart has since redesigned its "Made in USA" logos for some products to better indicate how much of the product was made domestically and how much was made overseas, the FTC noted in its letter.

"Based on your actions and other factors, the staff has decided not to pursue this investigation any further," FTC staff attorney Julia Solomon Ensor wrote in the letter.

The problem arose as Wal-Mart sought to fulfill a pledge made in 2013 to buy an extra $250 billion in U.S.-made goods over a decade to support U.S. manufacturing jobs. The world's largest retailer by revenue has faced criticism by unions and others that its low-cost business model was a big factor in pushing manufacturing jobs offshore.

The watchdog group Truth in Advertising found 100 instances of mislabeled products in June and raised them with the company. The group found another 100 in July and took the information to the FTC, said Legal Director Laura Smith.

"In light of the company's steps to address the issues, we're not surprised that the investigation has been closed," Smith said.

Wal-Mart said it was pleased with the decision. "We're committed to reviewing and strengthening our processes," said spokesman Kory Lundberg. REUTERS

Tesla slammed by Consumer Reports annual reliable survey

Telsa Model S GETTY IMAGES

Owners of vehicles with advanced fuel-saving technology and digital multimedia systems, including the Tesla Model S sedan, are hurting reliability, Consumer Reports magazine found in its annual survey of vehicle reliability.

There is "an emerging trend of increased troubles" with many vehicles that use new transmission technology to boost mileage, the magazine said Tuesday. The latest reliability survey was to be presented by the magazine's editors at a meeting of Detroit's Automotive Press Association.

One of the most technologically adventurous cars on the market, the Tesla Model S, registered a worse than average reliability score based on survey responses from 1,400 owners, Consumer Reports found. The battery powered Model S P85D was recently lauded by the magazine's editors for racking up the best scores ever in its performance tests. But owners complained of rattles, leaks and problems with the charging equipment, drivetrain and center console displays, the magazine said.

Complaints about balky multimedia "infotainment" systems continue to plague several major automakers, including Ford Motor Co., Nissan Motor Co., Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV and several prominent brands including General Motors Co.'s Cadillac luxury line, the magazine found.

Honda Motor Co.'s Acura luxury brand fell seven places to No. 18 in the magazine's ranking of 28 brands because of problems with transmissions and in-car entertainment systems, the magazine said.

Overall, Toyota Motor Corp.'s Lexus brand was the top-ranked brand in the magazine's reliability survey.

Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV's Fiat brand came in last.

Apple Music hits 6.5 million paid users: CEO Tim Cook

Apple Inc.'s music streaming service has netted more than 6.5 million paid users, the tech giant's chief executive officer, Tim Cook, said Monday.

Speaking at a technology conference organized by The Wall Street Journal in Laguna Beach, California, Cook said an additional 8.5 million people are participating in a free trial of Apple Music. That gives it more than 15 million users in total, which Cook described as a successful debut.

"I'm really happy about it, and I think the runway here is really good," Cook said.

Released in June, Apple Music is the company's attempt to carry its dominance of digital music through its iTunes store into the era of music streaming pioneered by Spotify and others. Apple is allowing users to test its service free for 90 days; the trial period elapsed for the first users earlier this month.

Analysts have predicted Apple's service will find a strong following due to the vast installed base of iTunes users, but few think the iPhone maker will eclipse other music streaming companies. Industry leader Spotify has more than 20 million paid subscribers worldwide, the company has told Reuters.

In a wide-ranging conversation with Gerard Baker, editor in chief of The Wall Street Journal, Cook also touched on Apple TV, which recently received a long-awaited update.

A new version of the set-top box featuring apps and expanded search features will be released later this month, but the product does not include a streaming TV service, which industry executives say the company is exploring.

Zooey Deschanel's baby name not as terrible as expected

Before you freak out about uber-quirky goddess Zooey Deschanel's chosen name for her new daughter, just remind yourself it could've been so, so much worse. She could've gone with something like Scrimshaw or Bethesda or, I don't know, Artisanal. But then, I'd be disappointed with anything Deschanel chose that wasn't Siri Is That Rain. So what did Deschanel and husband Jacob Pechenik go with for their 3-month-old daughter? Elsie Otter, the new mom confirms to People magazine. "Otter, like the animal," she clarifies. Oh, great. Actually, come to think of it, this is a little disappointing. Zooey, we expected so much more from you. The Otter bit is odd, sure, but it's the middle name. And there's nothing overly cutesy or twee about Elsie. What gives?

Sandra Bullock insists she's wasting no time educating 5-year-old adopted son Louis about the world's ills. "He fully understands what that means," she says when asked about prejudice in an interview with BET. "He doesn't understand why people judge each other based on the color of their skin, but he knows they do. He also knows there's sexism, he knows that there's homophobia." Sheesh. Louis must be a riot at playdates and sleepovers. Also, Bullock is the perfect person to pass along this knowledge, obviously, because she was in "Crash" so she totally gets it, OK?

Paula Deen was eliminated from "Dancing with the Stars" this week after a lackluster performance set to Madonna's "Vogue," and she's not the least bit surprised given how the show's judges treated her, she tells E! 6 Forward-looking films that got the future wrong

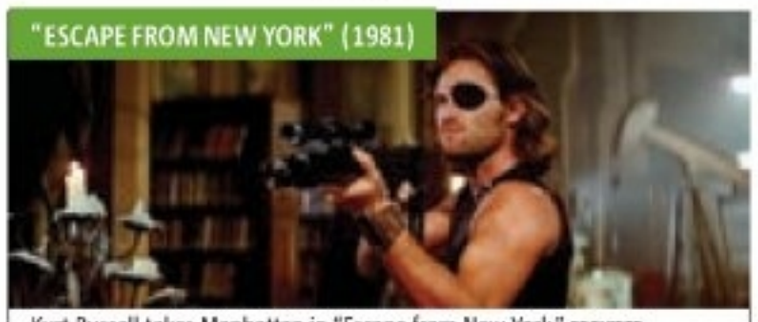
Today is the day Marty McFly and Doc Brown visited in "Back to the Future II." The movie didn't get much right. But it's not the only one whose imagination was too ambitious for our dumb world.

MATT PRIGGE

"ESCAPE FROM NEW YORK" (1981)



Kurt Russell takes Manhattan in "Escape from New York." PROVIDED

Year shown: 1997

What it got wrong: John Carpenter's piece of future shock finds badass con Snake Plissken (Kurt Russell) sent to rescue the president (Donald Pleasance) after he's kidnapped in 1997's Manhattan, which had become so crime-infested that the government walled it up, turning it into an island-size prison. In reality the opposite happened: Manhattan became a gated community for the rich.

What it got right: The closest thing is the part where Plissken destroys an important cassette tape, which could be read as symbolic of the way the medium would be finally killed as burnable CDs took over the market.

"STRANGE DAYS" (1995)

Ralph Fiennes has cool VR headgear in "Strange Days." PROVIDED

Year shown: 1999

What it got wrong: Directed by Kathryn Bigelow and written by her ex-hubs James Cameron, this thriller offered a gadget that plugs directly into people's cerebral cortex, allowing them to record first-person video and then replay the experiences as though they were happening again. Sounds like an awful tech toy that's in the works.

What it got right: Like "Until the End of the World," it foresaw technology that would allow us to disappear inside ourselves. It's also, in typical Cameron sledgehammer fashion, about the unrest after a Rodney King-esque incident, though that's one case of a futuristic film looking backward.

"DEATH RACE 2000" (1975)

Two typically goofy cars in Paul Bartel's "Death Race 2000." PROVIDED

What it got wrong: The campy dystopia envisions a future in which the masses would rally around an annual cross-country wacky race. It also didn't realize that Sylvester Stallone, merely third-billed, was one year from becoming Rocky Balboa.

What it got right: The '70s teemed with sci-fi about societies salivating over gruesome sport. Though these films oversold future humankind's bloodlust, the idea of terrible reality TV still became too real.

"BACK TO THE FUTURE PART II" (1989)

In the 2015 of Marty McFly (Michael J. Fox), they have flying cars. PROVIDED

Year shown: 2015 (Oct. 21, to be exact)

What it got wrong: Marty (Michael J. Fox) and Doc Brown (Christopher Lloyd) time travel forward in the series' first sequel, winding up in a town riddled with hoverboards, clothes that can adjust size, pizzas that microwave in seconds and "Jaws" holograms. This all sounds cool, but something that doesn't is middle-aged Marty's penchant for wearing two ties at once.

What it got right: Well, the Cubs, once the laughingstock of baseball, are doing pretty well despite a loss over the weekend. And videoconferencing, as seen in a scene with special guest star Flea, happened. And hoverboards ... sort of exist, except they have wheels and are only ridden by the most annoying people in the world.

"UNTIL THE END OF THE WORLD" (1991)

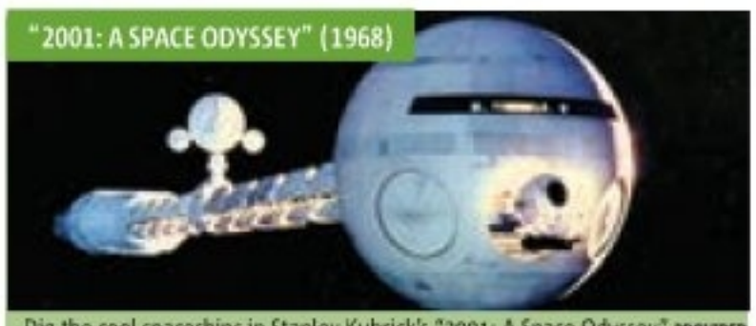
Solveig Dommartin gets hooked in "Until the End of the World." PROVIDED

Year shown: 1999

What it got wrong: Wim Wenders' "ultimate road movie" is just that: It spans four continents, seven countries and 15 cities, and the original cut runs over five hours. It's also set in 1999, when the world is threatened by an out-of-control satellite, which we avoided.

What it got right: Actually, a lot. There are GPS gizmos in cars, widescreen television sets and, most eerily of all, smartphone-like gadgets that consume their users' lives, turning them into antisocial addicts. There's also the way the world has become a giant global playground. About the only ways it overshot were with a device that gives eyesight to the blind (sort of) and another that records dreams — but those, surely, are en route.

"2001: A SPACE ODYSSEY" (1968)



Dig the cool spaceships in Stanley Kubrick's "2001: A Space Odyssey." PROVIDED

Year shown: 2001 (and thereabouts)

What it got wrong: The most beautiful and exquisitely made retro vision of the future, filmed on the cusp of Neil Armstrong's moon walk, couldn't have predicted that in 2015 space exploration would be close to dunzo. We also don't yet have HAL-level artifical intelligence. Oh, and we're still being ignored by the rest of the universe (as far as we can tell).

What it got right: A good chunk of the film dotes on its many tech toys, sometimes merely observing how things in the future work. But it did predict video chatting.

The neighborhood finally sees its first seven-figure sale.

MEGAN JOHNSON
letters@metro.us

Bostonians have long known about the sprawling historic homes in Dorchester, the city's largest neighborhood. But it's not every day they see a single-family home in the area sell for more than $1 million.

Brian Piccini's (now former) home at 92 Grampian Way is a three-bed, three-bath Garrison-style home in the Over the Bridge section of Savin Hill. The home was initially listed for $999,000, and after a competitive bidding war is under conract for $1.01 million. The sale is expected to be finalized Oct. 30.

The Boston restaurateur, who owns dbar, Boston Chops and Deuxave, purchased the home with his former partner in 2006 for $650,000. (He bought out his ex's share of the home when they split.)

When rumors surfaced that he was going to sell the home about six months ago, he realized the property was generating a lot of interest.

"I had dozens of notes and offers in my mailbox," says Piccini, who is downsizing with his partner, Alex, for the South End. "Somebody even called my publicist with an inquiry."

Piccini credits the frenzy of interest to several factors: The house was fully renovated five years ago, and a porch was added. There are four off-street parking spaces, including two in the garage. And then there's the very private, fenced-in backyard, complete with lush, mature trees.

There's also a two-bedroom townhouse attached to the home, which Piccini lets sit vacant. (This is why the home was listed as both single and multi-family.)

In fact, Piccini's home is so identifiable with Savin Hill that it's even the homepage photo on the neighborhood's Wikipedia page.

A handful of Dorchester homes have been listed for more than $1 million, but 92 Grampian Way is the first single-family home to achieve the distinction of selling for more than seven figures.

Last week, before the house went into contract, Piccini's broker predicted 92 Grampian would be the one to snag the mighty honor.

"The initial response was just so positive," says Justin Green of In Realty. "There were multiple people interested, and the buyer came in really strong."

Two sides

Many locals agree the area has been undervalued for quite some time. Leslie MacKinnon of Gibson Sotheby's Savin Hill office says the area is finally receiving the attention it deserves. But with that attention come additional concerns.

"I think there's [mixed] feedback about the increasing home values in Dorchester. As one of Boston's largest neighborhoods, which represents many different households, there's a concern about housing stock becoming too expensive for those who have been here for a long time," explains MacKinnon.

"On the other hand, many feel that Dorchester has been overlooked for decades and is now finally being recognized for its magnificent housing stock and vibrant community."

5 Cancer Screening Tips for Men

Cancer affects thousands of men across the United States every year, with the most common diagnoses coming in the form of prostate, colon, testicular, lung, and skin cancer.

Not all cancers can be detected early on, but for some forms of the disease, the spread of cancer can be prevented through screenings. Here are five things you need to know about men's health screenings:

1. Prostate Cancer

One in every six men is affected by prostate cancer, which most often affects men over age 50. In addition, age, family history, diet and lifestyle, and race can all affect your risk and influence how often and at what age you should be screened. The most common screening is for prostate-specific antigen (PSA), which measures the blood level of PSA, a protein produced by the prostate gland. Screening recommendations:

- Age 18-40: Usually not required.
- Age 40-49: Discuss your risk level with your physician. Screening is recommended if you are considered high risk.
- Age 50+: Discuss screening with your physician.

2. Colorectal Cancer

While anyone can develop colorectal cancer, most cases are found in people age 50 and older, and everyone over 50-years old should be screened. Colorectal cancer screening for people under the age of 50 depends on the presence of other risk factors including adenomas (polyps), diet, family history, inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) and a prior diagnosis of colorectal cancer. Screening tests can include flexible sigmoidoscopy, colonoscopy, double-contrast barium enema, and CT colonography). Screening recommendations:

Ages 18-39: Screening is usually not necessary unless you have IBD, a concerning history of cancers in your family, or hereditary syndromes such as Lynch syndrome or FAP.

Ages 40-49: Review your risks annually with your physician. You may need to begin screening if you are at increased risk.

Ages 50+: Everyone should be screened.

3. Testicular Cancer

Testicular cancer may be the most common form of cancer for men ages 15-40, but fortunately it is also one of the most curable forms of cancer. Men should be encouraged to examine their testicles once a month and report any change in the way the testicle feels (increased size, lump in testicle, hard area) to their doctor right away. It is also important to speak with a doctor if you notice a dull ache in the lower stomach or groin, back pain, or pain/discomfort in the testicle itself. Screening for testicular cancer is easy and painless and can be done through a testicular exam, ultrasound, or blood test.

4. Lung Cancer

Although anyone can develop lung cancer, 80 percent of all lung cancers are caused by smoking and quitting smoking will lower your risk for lung cancer.

There is currently no standard screening for lung cancer. If you have a family history of the disease or are experiencing symptoms such as trouble breathing, chest discomfort, or blood in sputum, discuss testing options with your doctor. Other risk factors include previous diagnosis of lung cancer, exposure to asbestos, previous radiation to the chest for treating other cancer, prolonged exposure to high levels of radon, and chronic high-level exposure to second-hand smoke. Some tests, such as a chest CT scan, can help your physician get a better view of what is going on.

5. Skin Cancer

Skin cancer is a rapidly growing disease that affects one in five Americans. The best way to prevent skin cancer is to use sunscreen with SPF 15 or higher, wear hats and eye protection, and avoid excessive exposure to the sun.

To screen for skin cancer, anyone over 18 should complete a monthly self-exam to look for any new moles or changes to existing moles or birthmarks and have a physician evaluate them during your annual exam. Regular dermatologist appointments are important, particularly if you have a large number of moles, atypical moles or a family history of melanoma. Experts recommend using the "ABCDE rule" to help determine when a physician should see a mole or skin change.

NFL power rankings | by Luke Miller

No. 1

Patriots (5-0)

Deflategate revenge? Just another game in the win column if you ask the Pats. They are 5-0 for the first time since their ill-fated 16-0 regular season in 2007, which came after Spygate. Memo for the NFL: Offseason controversies lead to undefeated Patriots teams.

No. 2

Packers (6-0)

Aaron Rodgers began his next two years without an interception at home streak, and the Packers got their closest win of the season with a big goal-line stand. The invisibility of Eddie Lacy has to be concerning; he's only topped 50 rushing yards twice, and has yet to carry the ball 20 times in a game.

No. 3

Bengals (6-0)

Cincinnati is playing so well they look like the Cardinals do when the Cardinals play bad teams. Andy Dalton is on pace for somewhere between five and six interceptions, less than half what he's thrown in any previous season. Sign me up. I believe.

No. 4

Broncos (6-0)

If we just copy and paste "The defense is as good as any defense we've seen, but the offense is miserable," in here every week, does that work going forward? The optimistic take is that the Broncos finally got the run game going with 152 yards on the ground.

No. 5

Panthers (5-0)

The Panthers kept being the team that just wins each week. Greg Olsen is off to a big start as Cam Newton's best (only?) receiving threat, and caught the game-winner to complete his second 130-yard receiving day of the season. They host the resurgent Eagles on Sunday night.

No. 6

Steelers (4-2)

Who needs Ben Roethlisberger to Antonio Brown when you have Landry Jones to Martavis Bryant? The Steelers, now 2-1 without Big Ben, are looking more and more like one of the class teams of the NFL once he gets back in the fold. He remains sidelined with a knee injury

No. 7

Cardinals (4-2)

The Cardinals have lost two games in almost the exact opposite method they've won their other four. In Arizona's victories, Carson Palmer has thrown for 12 touchdowns and just two interceptions. Palmer in the team's two setbacks has thrown two touchdowns and three picks.

No. 8

Jets (4-1)

Is Ryan Fitzpatrick suddenly a help and not a hindrance to the Jets' season? If they're this good on defense, can pound the rock with Chris Ivory and have good quarterback play ... well, we'll know more after they head to Foxborough to face the top-ranked Patriots.

No. 9

Falcons (5-1)

Devonta Freeman is the surprise of the season, but it's yet more surprising that Atlanta is content with giving him 13 carries, especially considering every other player with a carry fumbled Thursday. After 34 receptions in the Falcons' first three games, Julio Jones has 15 in the last three.

No. 10

Vikings (3-2)

Rookie Stefon Diggs' emergence as a receiving threat (216 yards in the last two games) may finally give opponents something to worry about besides Adrian Peterson. And it may be just in time, if teams are going to focus on just shutting down the run like Kansas City did Sunday.

Colts (3-3)

Indianapolis head coach Chuck Pagano says he "doesn't regret" the "fake-punt play" the Colts ran Sunday in their Deflategate rematch against the Patriots. Their opponents can only hope he doesn't regret it enough to run it again, and again, and again.

Revs running out of time to flip into playoff mode

The Revs aren't yet officially in the playoffs with one regular-season game remaining.

RICH SLATE
@RichSlate
sports@metro.us

Jermaine Jones and the Revs haven't won in over a month. GETTY IMAGES

After two lengthy winless streaks earlier in 2015, it had seemed like the Revolution (13-12-8) had finally gotten their act together late in the year. Instead, New England heads into its final regular-season match on Sunday (5 p.m., CSNNE) at Yankee Stadium vs. NYCFC (10-16-7) carrying the burden of a new four-game winless streak (0-3-1).

Yet again, the Revs had a chance to clinch a playoff spot last Saturday in their home finale against. Montreal (14-13-6), but they choked in a 1-0 loss at Gillette Stadium that enabled the Impact to make the postseason for the first time in their franchise's brief history.

New England still isn't in much danger of missing the playoffs since it remains three points ahead of seventh-place Orlando City (12-13-8) with a goal-differential that is plus-8 better. It would take a monumental collapse — a blowout loss to NYCFC coupled with a lopsided win by Orlando at Philadelphia (9-17-7) on Saturday night. Still, the fact that it has come down to the last match for the Revolution to clinch a playoff bid is shocking, given that a few weeks ago, they were legitimately in the hunt for a top-two seed in the Eastern Conference and a bye.

For more Revs and MLS news, visit metro.us

The easiest thing for fans to point out about the Revolution this season versus last season is that they made no moves this summer in the transfer window while in 2014 midfielder Jermaine Jones came aboard and made an immediate impact that carried them all the way to the MLS Cup. On paper, this club still has plenty of potential and ability but it certainly hasn't been apparent in their last four games where they have scored a combined two goals.

Montreal shut them out for the second time in a month as New England lacked any creativity or confidence in going one-on-one after Ignacio Piatti scored the go-ahead goal for the Impact in the 55th minute. Gillette had the largest crowd ever for a Revolution regular-season game (42,947) on Saturday and needless to say, their supporters deserved better than what they got on the field that night.
